The Heist: How Grace Robs Us Of Our Shame

Synopsis

Some say there were two thieves crucified on Golgotha, but I believe there were Three. In the ultimate act of sacrifice, Jesus robbed the Enemy of every claim he ever had on our lives. He stole all our shame and guilt, and gave us back our lives so that we could live in true freedom. The real scandal of Jesus' work on the cross is found not only in what it gives but also in what it steals. The Grace of God robs the enemy of his ability to shame us. It robs death of its sting. And it robs sin of its power to destroy. We all felt the weight of shame and brokenness. Like the prodigal son, we all pursued our own path only to find ourselves far from home and out of options. We long for a fresh start, but what we need most is the ability to see ourselves through God's eyes of grace. New York City pastor Chris Durso believes grace is the central message of all Scripture. While there have been some daring heists and cunning capers throughout history, this book is about the greatest heist the world has ever seen—a daring raid where God's son took back what the enemy had stolen, freeing us from the power of shame, sin, and Satan. Through a fresh take on the parable of the prodigal son, and the fascinating account of a true modern day diamond heist, The Heist offers a bold invitation into God's boundless grace.

I bought one copy for me and gave one to my sister! Wow! Such a good read. It's amazing how we let shame hold us back - not anymore!

Phenomenal book. Completely changed my perspective of grace and renewed it in a way I never thought possible.

Pastor Chris is amazing and his book is a true best seller.

Awesome book! Worth the time to read for sure!!!

The description on the back cover lured me in. The first two sentences read, "In the ultimate act of sacrifice, Jesus robbed the Enemy of every claim he ever had on our lives. He stole all our shame and guilt and gave us back our lives so that we could live in true freedom." I am my own harshest critic and I tend to get myself bound up in unnecessary amounts of guilt at times. I have read books on grace that were Biblically sound and refreshing reminders of my identity in Christ. I hoped this book would have a similar, uplifting effect and would help me train my line of thinking to give myself grace since Christ extends it to me. Unfortunately, I found this book very difficult to finish. In the first few chapters, I found the tale of an actual criminal heist interwoven into the authors commentary and retelling of Bible passages to pique enough of my curiosity to keep me reading. By about 1/3 of the way through the book, it was challenging for me to continue to reading this author's writing style. I don't like to sound harsh, but am a firm believer in being honest and not sugar-coating things unnecessarily, so here goes: I feel as though this books message would be better delivered if it were condensed down into a single speech. When reading through the sampling of different Bible passages being retold and expanded by the author, I felt there were many sentences of redundant nature and words were not carefully chosen to have the most impact. I acknowledge that I am not a skilled, professional writer, but I consider myself well-read. I appreciate when a book has the right balance between being conversational and also efficient (not following an undue amount of rabbit-trails). Here is an example from the book: "I wonder what life was like in the prodigal son's home before he ran away. Were the brothers constantly fighting, as brothers often do? Was the younger brother tired of always playing second fiddle to an older, more responsible brother? Did he grow up hearing, "Why can't you be more like your brother?" Living in the shadow of a smarter older brother would have been tough. Is that what caused him to want to leave his house so badly? Or did he think he was missing out on something? Was he comparing his life to what the guys down the street were doing? Did he start believing the lies? Perhaps he had been counting the days until he could collect his inheritance and be done with both his father and his brother, and he just got tired of waiting." (pgs 53-54) While much of the length of this book comes from the author inserting his speculations about exactly what was going on in the thoughts of individuals mentioned in the Bible, I was able to bookmark two locations where I felt the author shed new light on Scripture. I appreciated the perspective found in those locations. On pages 21-22, the theme of God knowing we would need a covering, from providing clothes to Adam and Eve following their sin, to providing Christ's righteousness for our sin is introduced. On page 52, the author draws a conclusion that part of the reason the slaves (after being liberated from Egypt) exhibited an attitude of defeat and were prone to complaining could've been due to their still viewing themselves as slaves. Having spent a lifetime under the oppression of slavery is likely to put a damper on optimism and confidence. In another location, Durso makes a claim that I feel was poorly stated in the least. Pondering the fact that Mark 15:44 states Pilate was surprised to hear Jesus was already dead, he writes the following: "I was confused by Pilate's astonishment, so I did some research to help me understand what he was reacting to. As I dug through commentaries, reading the historic facts noted by different theologians and scholars of the Word, I found out that in those days the cross was not necessarily intended to kill people. We might see the cross as a means to death because we know the cross as the place where Jesus ultimately met His death, but that wasn't the original intention of the cross. The purpose of the cross was to humiliate the very worst criminals." I agree that humiliation was likely part of the goal of crucifixion as a means of punishment, especially since many men were stripped of their clothing and hung on the cross naked. However, to deny that the primary goal of pounding nails through a human's wrists and feet and leaving them suspended on a wooden cross is intended as capital punishment is not logical. The intention of crucifying a person was to kill them. It was public capital punishment. Suggesting otherwise made the author's credibility suffer in my opinion. On page 161, Durso claims that at the time of Lazarus's death, Mary (Martha's sister) was an unbeliever. I am hesitant to agree with this claim for several reasons, but I'll let you read the author's words in one final quotation so you can make your own decision: "Technically, at this point, Mary too was an unbeliever. Jesus had told Martha that Lazarus would rise again, but she thought He was telling her about the distant future. Could this be why when Jesus finally arrived at the tomb, He wept (see verse 35)? Jesus wanted these sisters to know that Lazarus would live again. he wanted them to believe His word. Jess didn't cry because He was grieving over Lazarus. He was crying because they didn't recognize fully who He was and didn't trust that His word wouldn't return void (see Isaiah 55:11)." Mary didn't understand that Jesus wasn't talking about the bodily Resurrection that would come later for believers, but calling her an unbeliever due to a misunderstanding during a time of great grief in her life seems to be quite an assumption on the author's part. The Lord judges by the heart and only He knows exactly when Mary had placed her faith in Jesus. I feel the emphasis on Christ here is only on His Diety, with the author's interpretation leaving no room for Christ's humanity, which could certainly have wept with sorrow over his friends' loss and grief. I don't claim to know what was going through Christ's mind as He wept, and I feel we should be very cautious listening to writers, speakers, or even theologians who do claim to have such knowledge. For the reasons I've outlined above, I would not recommend this book.In the interest of full-disclosure, I received this book courtesy of Blogging for Books for the purpose of reviewing. I am not obligated to give a positive review, my opinions shared are genuine.

Originally pitched as The One Crime Jesus Did Commit, the publisher thought How Grace Robs Us of Our Shame less offensive subtitle to Chris Durso's latest book The Heist. The way God saved us from Satan's grip and frees us from ourselves, from our sin and shame, is nothing short of an incredible heist. The author elaborates the parable of the prodigal son, interwoven with the almost perfect diamonds and jewelry robbery by Leonardo Notarbartolo in Antwerp, Belgium back on 2003's Valentine's Day. Leonardo was caught afterward because of his team members panicked and failed to set the remnants which could trace back to the criminals on fire. In a perfect act of sacrifice, Jesus Christ robbed the enemy of every claim he ever had on our lives in return for grace and freedom. The narrative makes excursions to the biblical stories of David, Lazarus, Zacchaeus, and Simon Peter. What started as a sermon, so much is clear, should have kept the focus on the two initial story lines to better serve the reader. The personal stories of being a pastor's kid and church kid was a turn-off as well. It sounded too much like a recommendation to live 24/7 in a bubble called a local church, possibly unintended, but difficult to relate to as 99,99% of the rest of mankind, believers and unbelievers. Speaking of the latter, this audience may find it difficult to follow Durso in his quick steps through bible land in order to reach the party of the father who has his prodigal son back, the graceful end God planned for all of His children. Erwin Raphael McManus (Mosaic, Los Angeles, author of The Artisan Soul) wrote the foreword to The Heist.
